TO EXPLAIN COUNTY PORT DEVELOPMENT AT PUBLIC MEET

Congressman McGrath and Others of Prominence to Speak at Hearing on Port Bonds

Daly City voters will be given first hand information on the proposed San Mateo County port development in Redwood Harbor at a public meeting to be held in the Burlingame City Hall next Thursday (August 16), at which time the purpose of the $460,000 bond issue to be voted on August 28 will be explained.

The meeting will open at 8 p. m.

Speakers will include Colonel B. C. Allin, director of the Port of Stockton and the engineer who developed the Houston inland seaport; Congressman John J. McGrath of San Mateo County, and F. T. Letchfield, San Francisco bank executive and industrial expert.

Colonel Charles N. Kirkbride, prominent San Mateo attorney, who this week accepted the chairmanship of the San Mateo County Harbor Campaign Committee, will preside.

John Fahey and Ralph McArthur of Daly City have been asked to serve on the harbor committee.

The proposed county harbor project will cost $663,000, $460,000 of which will be supplied by the bond issue and $203,000 will come from the federal government in the form of gifts.

The $460,000 bond issue will be used as follows: $94,000 to pay half the $188,000 dredging cost; $54,000 for harbor lands, rights of way and easements, and $312,000 for construction of wharves, transit sheds, spur tracks, roadways, dikes and provision of water supply and fire protection.

Of the federal gifts of $203,000, $94,000 will go toward dredging, and $109,000 for port facilities. This money need not be repaid.

The United States will purchase $312,000 of the $460,000 bonds at a low interest rate to provide the immediate funds required to do the dredging and create the port facilities.

Construction will begin in thirty to sixty days from the time funds are made available, and will be completed in from ninety to 120 days. The port work will give employment to 200 men the first month, 400 the second and 500 the third, it is estimated.

Economic and social values which are expected to accrue from the county port are cheaper goods, larger payrolls, new industries, more homes and lower taxes.

The Redwood Harbor development has been improved step by step under federal participation since 1882. The present depth in Redwood Creek is twenty feet and the new depth will be twenty-seven feet. This will mean that ocean going freighters can come into the port without waiting for tide.

Port facilities to be created will make the creek an actual public harbor.

Port improvements call for tonnage of 150,000 yearly, which would be drawn from the peninsula and the Santa Clara Valley.

Conservative judgment of army and private engineers is that the $460,000 bonds, principal and interest, will be retired from earnings of the harbor.

ORDER ON SILVER MARKS ADVANCE

Another important step has been taken by the national administration in putting over the New Deal by the nationalization of silver.

The rehabilitation of the white metal was promised by President Roosevelt, and the issuance of an executive order on Thursday, providing for the sale of all silver stocks to the federal government, was simply an integral part of carrying out his plan.

The mints will receive any and all silver in the United States. They will deduct as seigniorage 61 8-25 per cent of the silver so received and will return to the depositor silver certificates or other currency in an amount equal to the monetary value of the remainder.

The order does not affect domestic silver mined since December 21, 1933.

All silver held in the United States on this date must be delivered to the mints within ninety days, according to the official proclamation.

Defective Lights Taboo

A defective light raid was staged last Saturday night on the El Camino Real in Colma by state highway patrolmen headed by Captain Perussina.

JEFFERSON UNION HIGH TO OPEN MONDAY

Parents Requested to Have Children Attend First Day's Session

The new school term will open at the Jefferson Union High School on next Monday morning at 8:15 o'clock. Registration will begin immediately and the class rolls completed so that textbooks may be distributed and regular school work begun without delay.

For the convenience of freshmen and all other new students, registration for them will take place at one o'clock. These students, therefore, will not report for registration until after the noon period. They should be at the school promptly at one o'clock.

Principal James Ferguson makes an urgent request of all parents that they send their children to school on the first day. This day is as important as the second or third day for the reason that all pupils must first be registered and enrolled in their proper classes. If they do not come the first day this must be done at another time. The pupil thus loses the work done in the meantime and the program of the whole class is interfered with.

In most cases, Mr. Ferguson says, pupils entering school late find themselves behind the rest of the class and, becoming discouraged, seldom catch up. These late comers form a large part of the failures.

As a general rule, pupils who are interested in their school work enter school on the first day and get down to work immediately. These pupils never find themselves behind in their work and, consequently, never have any back work to make up.

"Get a good start," Mr. Ferguson urges, "as this is most important in a school course." The best way to get this, he says, is to enroll on the first day and get down to study immediately.

There is an additional reason for enrolling on the first day. Many of the classes will be overcrowded, and places must be reserved for those who register first. This will be particularly true in carpentering and auto mechanics, as well as in typing, science, art and other courses which are in popular demand.

The new courses offered in carpentering, arts and crafts, music—both instrumental and vocal—etc., will be fully explained at the assembly meeting previous to registration on Monday morning.

PLAYERS WITH WIDE VARIETY OF TALENT APPEAR IN NEW FILM

An unusual cast with a wide variety of talents was engaged by First National to enact the roles in the radio romance, "Twenty Million Sweethearts," which comes to the Daly City Theater for three days, starting Sunday, August 12. This was due to the fact that, while the picture is a comedy drama, it carries many singing numbers as befits a story of the radio.

Pat O'Brien heads the list as a fast talking talent scout. This is his fourth big picture, having appeared before in "Gambling Lady,' "College Coach" and "Bureau of Missing Persons," although he has been known on the screen for years.

Ginger Rogers

Dick Powell and Ginger Rogers have romantic roles as well as singing parts, and both are exceptionally well qualified. Dick was a singer and orchestra leader for years before engaging in picture work. He also has demonstrated his ability in "Convention City," "College Coach" and in the musical spectacles, "Forty-second Street," "Footlight Parade" and "Gold Diggers of 1933."

Miss Rogers, formerly a favorite on the musical comedy stage, has in recent years been playing both straight roles and singing parts in pictures. She was one of the leads in "Gold Diggers of 1933" and "Forty-second Street."

One of the big novelties of the picture is the Four Mills Brothers, who are known to radio fans all over the country. Ted Fio Rito and his band form another of the specialty numbers.

Pioneer Teacher Resigns

Mrs. Josephine Johnson has resigned her position as teacher at the Thornton School.

She retires after thirty years of service in the public schools of California, and will be greatly missed by her associates in the educational field.

HI, THERE, LEGIONNAIRES!

Pageantry, replete with color, thrills and spectacular events will rule in San Francisco during the week of August 11 to 15 when the American Legion, and allied organizations, holds its sixteenth annual convention. Accompanying an important business program the fifty committees under the direction of Carl W. Miles, general chairman, have produced a massive show made up of many scenes and events.

The most important, and spectacular, event of the week will be the monster parade, Monday afternoon, August 13. Thousands of Legionnaires, members of the Auxiliary, the Sons of the American Legion and other veterans will march to the stirring music of more than fourteen great military bands; forty drum and bugle corps with their martial rhythm, drill units and artistic floats will combine to make this event an inspiring demonstration.

Monday night a great military pageant will be held in Seals Stadium where Legion Post bands and drum and bugle corps will participate in a competition to determine what Legion band and drum corps will represent California at the National American Legion in Miami next October.

In addition there will be numerous sports events, and other activities to entertain the visiting Legionnaires and their families.

Early indications are that more than 40,000 visitors plan to come to San Francisco to participate and witness the events, according to Chairman Miles.

GOVERNMENT AID GREAT BOON TO MINING INDUSTRY

By J. W. MARCHBANK
(Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work)

Gratifying in the extreme is the steady increase of gold production in Alaska, an augmentation I predicted quite a while ago. Alaska is a veritable treasure field that has only been scratched. Millions of dollars in value are being taken out by the doughty miners of the north and it is only a beginning. The next few years promise to make the old days seem very tame.

For the first six months of this year the production was more than double over the same period last year, according to official figures. The output this year was of the value of $5,749,652, that of last year $2,780,347, a gain of $2,968,305.

One must take into consideration that gold is selling for $35 an ounce at present, sixty nine per cent more than last year, and that advance accounts partially for the grand showing for the first six months of this year. However, the increase in volume has been substantial, approximately 32 per cent.

* * *

Words of mine in my pamphlet "Gold Mining and Unemployment" are worth repeating at this time, with the eyes of the world focussed on Alaska, by reason of Federal Government activities up there. I said:

"In devising means of helping others to help themselves no better plan could be adopted than the encouragement of the able bodied, whose independence may have been sapped to some extent, but not irretrievably, by unemployment and consequent acceptance of charity, to go out into the gulches and hills of the Northwest and of Alaska in search of gold. Building up of manliness will proceed along with the engrossing occupation of prospecting.

"The initial expenditure in the worth while trek to the gold regions should not fall on the benevolent of the community—they are hard pressed as it is—and the individual who will derive the most good from the adventure is without capital for the purchase of pan and rocker and supplies.

"Just here comes in the need of the establishment of trading posts by Uncle Sam. With thousands of miners in the field there must be a certainty they will have ample food while engaged in work that ultimately will add millions to the wealth of the country and be the principal factor in chasing that bugaboo, depression, from our midst."

* * *

As I have pointed out before, Canada is going ahead fast in the production of base metals. The well informed everywhere know of the marvelous production in the East Kootenay and other sections. Late figures show for the first four months of this year, compared with the same period in 1933, the copper output increased from 30,800 tons to 56,801 tons; lead from 41,123 to 51,663; and zinc from 26,881 to 44,852.

* * *

The latest information about Russia's strides in gold production is found in Sidney Norman's highly interesting column in the Vancouver Sun. He states a number of new fields of great value have recently been discovered, particularly in Yakutia, which is characterized as one of the most important gold bearing areas in the world. The large deposits on Lena River, with its tributaries, mined in part under concession by a British company prior to the change from the rule of the Czar to that of the Bolsheviks, are also of international importance.

There will be no school session on Monday afternoon. The schools will close in order that the children may witness the American Legion parade, which will be held in San Francisco that afternoon.

It is understood the San Francisco schools will also close at that time, to enable the children to view the spectacle.

The schools will again reconvene on Tuesday morning and then continue throughout the term.

HIGH SCHOOL GROUND WORK WILL CONTINUE

Promise Eight More Weeks' Employment Given on Project Under Way

"Work on the Jefferson Union High School grounds will continue for eight weeks more."

This was the report brought back from San Mateo County Unemployment Relief headquarters on last Tuesday by Principal James Ferguson.

The project of further grading the athletic grounds of the high school had been submitted previously to the local county committee by the high school trustees and had been approved and submitted to the SERA authorities for their approval. This was granted on Tuesday and the work will start again as soon as the required number of unemployed men can be assigned to the job.

This extension will make possible the finishing of the grading of the practice field adjoining the baseball diamond, as well as the grading of the new tennis and basketball courts.

DRUIDS CIRCLE HONOR VISITING DISTRICT HEAD

El Camino Circle No. 142 of Druids tendered their District Deputy, Mrs. Madeline Fellows, a reception in the Odd Fellows' Temple at San Mateo Wednesday evening of this week, honoring her as chairman of the Grand Ttrustees of the State of California.

The reception was a complete surprise to the visiting officer.

A class of four candidates was initiated. The floor work was put on by the Hillcrest Circle No. 143. The ritualistic work received much praise from the members of the circle and the captain, Mrs. Katherine Foreman, received many compliments on the work.

At a late hour the guests retired to the banquet hall, where a splendid spaghetti dinner was served at an artistically decorated table.

A large group of grand officers and visiting members from other circles were present.

The occasion will be long remembered by those fortunate enough to be in attendance.

Sign Presented to Firemen

The regular meeting of the Veteran Firemen's Association of Daly City was called to order by Comrade H. W. A. Rickmann, the president.

As the last order of the evening a buffet supper was served by our good Comrade Chef Hesslein. Those who were not present missed a wonderful meeting.

BOARD SEEKS EXPLANATION OF SERA RULES

Supervisors Call Meeting to Secure Enlightenment of State Administration

At its session Monday the Board of Supervisors arranged for a public meeting at which explanation of the requirements of SERA relief plan will be sought.

The hearing will be held next Monday evening at 8 o'clock in the auditorium of the Burlingame High School and will be open to the public. At that time Miss Alma Holshuh, SERA supervisor for San Mateo and five other counties, will explain to the public the demands of the state and federal governments as to quelifications for persons applying before employment in the administrative branch can be given in this county.

It was repeatedly stated at the board meeting that criticism was being heaped upon the supervisors because of certain phases of relief activity now in vogue in the county, especially employment of outside investigators, and it was explained the board has been informed by those in charge these rules must be conformed to in order to get the state and federal aid. Members of the board made it clear they wanted the public to know exactly who is responsible for these requirements and the situation now prevailing.

During the discussion over the public meeting, Robert Koshland, chairman of the relief committee, and several of its members and Miss Holshuh protected against the holding of a public hearing, saying the press could give out all the information necessary.

The supervisors, however, insisted that it be held and that those objecting be there to explain the rules for which the supervisors are being criticized.

A member of the press here stated that if the SERA organization would insert some facts, instead of pages of meaningless generalities, in the literature sent to newspapers for publication a much better understanding of the matter would prevail and there would be fewer protests and less criticism.

Miss Holshuh demanded that the board vote immediately on whether or not it wanted this county to continue under the SERA program or withdraw and go on its own. Her demand brought a scathing reply from Dr. C. V. Thompson, chairman of the board, who asked her if she was "trying to put the supervisors on the spot."

Dr. Thompson also said before the board took any action it would get further information and a better understanding of just what the SERA requirements are and whether they are being properly adhered to in the administration of relief in this county.

It was decided the meeting should be held Monday evening and Miss Holshuh is scheduled to appear and explain to the public the rules of SERA administration. The date was changed from Friday night, as originally proposed, because Miss Holshuh stated she could not be present Friday and that no other person in her organization was qualified to make the proper explanations.

EDUCATION BOARD ORDERS FLAG SALUTE

The Board of Education of San Mateo County reaffirms its belief that the flag salute should be a regular patriotic ceremony conducted every morning when boys and girls assemble.

The teachers of this county will promote better citizenship by awakening in the hearts and minds of children a deep and abiding love for the United States of America, and an appreciation of our country by taking advantage of each occasion as it arises in the classroom or on the playground to impress upon the minds of their pupils the imperative need to understand American principles of good government and to be willing to assume civic responsibility.

The Board of Education, therefore, charges the teachers of San Mateo County with the duty to observe the spirit as well as the form of the daily patriotic flag salute.

GOOD NUTRITION NEEDS PROTEIN

Certain Amount Necessary in the Daily Menu.

By EDITH M. BARBER

GOOD nutrition demands that a certain amount of our food supply us with what is known as protein. These foods are known to the scientists as protein-bearing foods, and not any two give us exactly the same contribution. Protein itself of whatever kind is a very complicated material, containing different amounts of the substances known as amino acids which number twenty or more, and of which we need greater or smaller amounts. This need not concern us if we use a variety of the foods which are high in total protein in our diets as one will supplement another.

Some foods, such as milk and meat and other animal protein, will any one of them give us all that we need. Cereals, which contain more protein than we usually consider them to have, find in milk just what they lack as far as protein is concerned. You see the custom of serving bread with milk and cereals with the same liquid is based on more than the contribution which milk makes in flavor and the fact that it adds moisture to a food which is rather too dry for our taste when eaten by itself.

Protein foods when they are absorbed by the blood after they have been digested are first used to rebuild the tissues which have worn out during the day just by the mere act of existing. Children, of course, must use protein for building the new tissues of their growing bodies, and one of the good reasons for allowing each child a quart of milk a day is the contribution it makes on this count. If any protein is left over after the tissues have taken what they want, what is needed for supplying energy will be taken, and then most of the remainder may be deposited as fat, as is the excess of any other food. Many persons have the idea that protein is not fattening because in most reducing diets the proportion of protein is large. That is because we cannot neglect supplying daily protein for the tissues and also because some of the calories which protein may supply are used up in its digestion. If, however, we overeat of protein foods as well as of any other, extra fat will usually result.

Besides the foods mentioned already fish, eggs, cheese, nuts and vegetables known as legumes, which we know as peas, beans and lentils, are well supplied with protein. It would be possible to get what we need from vegetable sources, but our meals would be rather bulky and even the vegetarian usually allows milk and cheese in his diet. As far as the food question is concerned, variety is not only the spice of life but its dietetic salvation.

Eggs Soubisse.

6 eggs
1 cup sliced cooked onion
4 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons flour
2 cups milk
¾ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon paprika

Melt butter, stir in flour and seasoning and when well blended add the milk. Stir until smooth and thick. Drop each egg into an individual baking dish. Mix the onion with the sauce and divide among the six dishes. Place in a moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) and bake until the eggs are set, about fifteen minutes. Buttered crumbs may be sprinkled over the top of the eggs before baking.

Meat Loaf.

1 pound hamburger
½ cup crumbs
4 sprigs parsley (chopped)
1 finely chopped onion
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
⅛ teaspoon celery salt
Milk or water to moisten.

Mix ingredients. Make loaf and put in greased baking dish. Place two slices of bacon on top of loaf. Place four medium potatoes, pared and cut in halves in pan, with ½ cup of water in the bottom. Cover and bake 30 minutes in moderate oven. Then let brown for 10 to 15 minutes.

Thick Dried Pea Soup.

2 cups dried peas
Cold water
1 large onion, sliced
2 tablespoons butter, margarine, or other fat
2 tablespoons flour
1 pint milk
2 tablespoons salt
Dash of pepper

Pick over the peas, wash well, and soak overnight in one quart of cold water. In the morning, add one more quart of water and the onion, cover, and simmer for about one and one-half hours, or until the peas are soft. Press the peas and onion through a fine sieve, and save all the liquid. Blend the fat and flour, add the milk, and stir until thickened. Mix with the pea pulp and liquid, season, and serve hot. If the soup becomes too thick, add more milk to give the right consistency.

Russians Plan Meeting to Study Stratosphere

Leningrad.—A world conference of authorities on the stratosphere is likely to be held in Russia in 1936.

It will coincide with a total eclipse of the sun, which is the most advantageous time to study the upper layers of the air.

This was the proposal voted by a conference of Soviet stratosphere experts here recently.

Meanwhile plans are being formulated for a new ascent into the stratosphere this summer. It is not expected that an attempt to beat Russia's own world record height of 63,327 feet will be made.

The intention is to study the stratosphere as much as possible with instruments improved by the knowledge gained from the record ascent.

Watch Lost by U. S. War Vet in France Is Found

Brockton, Mass.—Henry Noonan lost his watch while serving with the French ambulance unit during the World war. He was notified recently that it had been found. Mrs. Mary O'Neil, of Faribault, Minn., who just came into possession of it, asked in a letter to the Brockton lodge of Elks to locate Noonan for her, because his name and lodge number were inscribed on the back of the watch.

Youthful Fisherman Uses Toy Sailboat as Bobber

Waltham, Mass.—Veteran fishermen can get a few pointers from Paul Milvill, eleven, on how to catch, not only the big ones, but a good many at a time. Paul uses a toy sail boat to which he attaches four lines with baited hooks. The boat goes out about 50 feet with the lines trolling behind and when the fish bite the hooks the boat bobs up and down. He then pulls in his fish.

Lights of New York
By L. L. STEVENSON

When the heat comes, thousands leave New York. They have many places to go. The seashore bungalow colonies are little cities in themselves. There are other summer cities up in the mountains. In addition, there are hundreds of lakes. In fact, the state of New York offers just about every variety of scenery, except desert, that a vacation lover may desire. Since that is true within commuting distance, during the summer many New Yorkers merely toil in town and sleep and play away from the lights of Broadway. But there are other thousands who cannot do that. For them, the seashore is Coney island, the mountains, the Palisades of New Jersey and the lakes more often than not, the basin of some fountain or maybe just a fireplug shower.

• • •

Those thousands, or rather I should say millions, do not live in sections of the city where there is some escape from the effects of the sun. Their dwellings are in the narrow streets of the tenement districts. Their homes are airless and oftentimes dark. For them, there is no escape from the heat. Nights, they crowd the roofs or the parks. Days, they get along as best they can. Often, mothers, to keep their babes from stifling, load them into perambulators and walk with them until the early morning hours afford some relief. It is wearisome, but babies must breathe. And after those all night rambles, the mothers do their housework and cook in kitchens some of which are equipped with coal or wood stoves.

Those street showers are beaches of the tenement youngsters. They shout happily under the cool spray and carry on much like we used to do when we walked out to the old Sycamore, peeled our clothes and enjoyed ourselves in the yellow Scioto. The youngsters of the slums can't go quite that far, however. But they go as far as they can, a single garment satisfying the conventions. Some, however, wear bathing suits. Asked a kid why he did and he replied, "Because it makes me feel like I'm out at Coney." And an old softy turned his head right quick!

• • •

Perhaps you've read about Ramon Million. I think the Recording Angel placed a gold mark opposite Ramon Million's name. The only money he has is his name because he's been out of work a long time. He came out of his home on One Hundred Eighth street and found a bunch of heat-exhausted kids trying to turn on a fire hydrant. They weren't strong enough so Ramon Million did it for them. He cooled off the kids. But he broke the law. While he still had the wrench in his hand, along came a radio car and Ramon Million was arrested.

• • •

In court, he made no attempt to deny his guilt. The magistrate was sympathetic and imposed a fine of only $2. Million didn't have even a nickel so he went to jail for two days. And I sincerely hope his cell was cool and comfortable—as cool and comfortable as he made those youngsters.

How It Started
By Jean Newton

"To Make a Virtue of Necessity"

"TO MAKE a virtue of necessity" is to pretend to do voluntarily, and as a gracious act something that we are really compelled by necessity to do. This is one of the most popular sayings in modern speech, and it has been attributed to Chaucer, who used it in "The Knights Tale" of his Canterbury Tales in this way:

"To maken vertue of necessite."

The original of the saying, however, goes back farther than Chaucer, who wrote in the Fourteenth century. It appeared first in the writings of the great Roman, Quintilian, who is said to have lived from the year forty or forty-two to about a hundred and eighteen A. D. In his famous "Institutiones Oratoriae" he said:

"We give to necessity the praise of virtue."

CONVENTION PRESCRIBES

DEAR Mrs. Post: Is it proper to give a pharmacist the title of "Doctor" or not? I am about to have wedding announcements engraved and am wavering between "Mister" and "Doctor" because I don't know.

Answer: This is really a question of personal opinion, but best taste usually confines such use of the title Dr. to a D. D. or an M. D. or a D. D. S.

• • •

My dear Mrs. Post: The depression has not sufficiently lifted from our family and I must have a small house wedding because of the expenses. Please tell me how to plan an informal marriage service and still not have things any old way?

Answer: You can't have an informal marriage service, because it is a church ceremony. The words ceremonial and formal mean the same thing. You can of course have a simple wedding. Arrange a background of flowers or tree branches, or still more simply, stand in front of drawn curtains. The service is of course the same for every marriage: the clergyman enters first, the groom and best man follow him, your maid of honor then enters alone, and you with your father follow her. After the ceremony you and your husband turn and face the guests who one by one offer you their good wishes. Serve wedding cake and a fruit punch. If this seems to you not enough, add sandwiches and either tea or coffee or bouillon. This is really plenty.

• • •

Dear Mrs. Post: Very often I have a family in to dinner, of which one member is left-handed. My husband suggested that next time they are expected I set one place at table with the knives and spoons on the left side of the plate and the forks on the right. Is this ever done?

Answer: Not that I know of. Left-handed people must naturally accustom themselves to conventional table setting. So much so that it is questionable whether upsetting the regularity of your table would even add to the comfort of those who in picking up implements have become accustomed to cross their hands over their plates.

MISCELLANEOUS

DEAR Mrs. Post: I like tinted nail polish and my husband doesn't. He argues that such polish is decidedly opposed to good taste. We have gradually gotten into an argument about this, which is becoming irritating out of all proportion to its trifling subject, and we have now decided to ask you to decide whether tinted nails are anything for a husband to grow rabid about?

Answer: Since the supposition of a husband's growing rabid over nail polish is not quite believable, I'm not quite sure whether this letter is intended to be answered seriously or to be taken as a jest. However, supposing the question to be genuine, I would say that nails carefully manicured and slighted tinted are certainly in good taste. But gilded or silvered or deeply colored ones are something else again. In fact, those deepest red ones, which look as though the nail had been torn off and the finger ends left bleeding, are revolting to all except the few who have become inured to the shock of them. As a matter of fact, I doubt very much if a man can be found who does not hate them.

Dear Mrs. Post: The other evening my employer invited me to go home to supper with him and his family, so that afterwards we could finish some work. His wife and young daughter were extremely pleasant and hospitable, but never asked me to remove my hat. I went to the table with it on and worked for several hours after the meal in the same discomfort. Is it necessary to wait until the hostess says something?

Answer: Your employer's wife might perhaps have asked you if you would like to take off your hat. But I imagine that she thought you preferred to keep it on, since you did not take it off, before going into the dining room. Whenever you go to anyone's house for an evening meal and are wearing a day dress and hat, you take off the hat only if you want to. Asking anyone to take off hat or gloves is rarely if ever heard in the present day. A hostess sometimes says to a friend who continues to sit in a heavy coat, "Don't you want to take your coat off?" This is not a phrase of hospitality so much as an exclamation made because she feels that her guest is absent-mindedly unaware of her own discomfort.

Ancient Secret Revealed

Why Christian Serbs in the Petch district of Jugoslavia have for centuries placed lighted candles in the cemetery of an old Moslem mosque, known as St. George's columns, has been revealed by excavations. Those who followed the custom did not know why it was done, and had never heard a satisfactory explanation from their ancestors. The excavations show that the Mosque was built by victorious Turks on the site of an ancient Christian monastery dedicated to St. George. It is evident that even after their monastery had been removed the defeated Serbs continued to place the lighted candles.

Thoroughbred Nurseries Put California At Top

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Racing has a setting in California that cannot be approached anywhere else, and in harmony with tht setting it is quite proper its presentation should be of the faultless kind. The home sport has the great advantage of getting a large number of its headliners from California farms. And, as the seasons go on, even more of the feature runners will be from the nurseries of this state.

Permanence is much more likely in our neck of the woods than in some other commonwealths, where the thoroughbred has been a rarity for years. Breeding farms are familiar sights in California, and have been for a long time. In states having the pastime, now that laws permit wagering, but not boasting of haras, it is a debatable point as to its continuance over an extended period.

With plenty of gallopers being foaled at its well known farms, California can keep going "on its own" when other communities are having a hard time to maintain a game of any pretension to class.

A sturdy type of runner is bred throughout the state, especially in what is known as Central California. The proximity of the Pacific Ocean is a factor in producing animals of the best bone and substance. It was learned long ago in Ireland, the Argentine and other countries that sea air is important in the rearing of the strongest horses. Where could one match our temperate climate, permitting early foaling; our "gritty" soil or water, with the requisite lime in it, or the highly desirable red oat hay?

We have the farms and the thoroughbreds, no one gainsays that. In order to make full use of the opportunities for racing, any time in the year, too, a necessary move is reduction of the commission on the pari-mutuel pools from twelve to nine per cent, a truly modern "take."

For light summer reading we recommend to European statesmen the Locarno Pact.

In some localities law enforcement might better be termed "enfarcement."

SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Some Little Known Matters That Should Prove of General Interest

(By Maude Larue Ives)

Question: Where is Welfare Island, and what is significant about it?

Answer: It is a narrow island in the East River, between Manhattan and Long Island. It is a part of New York City. Penal institutions and hospitals of the great metropolis are located there. On the rocks at its north end a lighthouse rises fifty-four feet above the water.

* * *

Question: What is casein?

Answer: It is that part of milk which forms the curd in making cheese. Used alone, it will not form curd, but needs the action of some acid to complete the process. In its natural state it bears a close resemblance to the white of an egg, and, like the white of egg, is one of the protein food materials, all of which contain nitrogen, carbon, hydrogen, oxygen and sulphur.

For commercial purposes, casein is manufactured from cow's milk, of which it constitutes about three per cent. Its appearance is that of a dry, white or slightly brownish powder. It is used in making candy and patent foods, in the manufacture of glue, shoe polish, wall paper, paint and sizing, and as a basis for plastics in imitation of celluloid, ivory horn, etc.

* * *

Question: How many mints are there in the United States and where are they located?

Answer: There are three. They are located, respectively, at Philadelphia, Denver and San Francisco.

* * *

Question: What is bronze?

Answer: It is a mixture of copper and tin.

* * *

Question: What is the "minimum wage" and where did it originate?

Answer: It is the least wage required to keep a worker and his family in good living condition. Created in Victoria, Australia, in 1896.

* * *

Question: Where does the Sacramento River rise and into what body of water does it flow?

Answer: It rises near the slope of beautiful Mount Shasta and flows into Suisun Bay on the boundary between Contra Costa and Solano Counties.

MINING NOTES

The Sacramento Bee of recent date has the following to say:

The world's largest gold dredger is now a unit of the Hammonton fleet of of the Yuba Consolidated Gold Fields Company. The massive boat, rebuilt on the hull of old Dredger No. 13, in the latter's pond, one-half mile west of this place, has successfully passed the tests. There was no ceremony when operations began last Wednesday. John B. Bubb, the plant superintendent and consulting engineer, and W. B. Macauley, chief engineer, turned on electric current that sent the boat's machinery into action, and that was all.

The new dredge will go through the tailings left by Dredger No. 13 before seeking new ground. It is estimated that in three years the dredger's course will be directly through the present site of the town of Mammonton, which will be abandoned for another site.

The boat has a chain of 125 buckets, each weighing two and a half tons. These buckets will sink to a depth of 115 feet, as compared with eighty-two feet for the old dredgers in this field. The hull of the reconstructed boat is 233 feet long, sixty-eight feet wide and eleven feet six inches deep. From the bow of the hull to the extreme end of the stacker the distance is 510 feet. Tailings may be stacked to a height of eighty feet above the pond.

During the construction period on an average of 140 men were employed, with a payroll of $18,000 a month. The operations will proceed from now on night and day, with the exception of Christmas and Fourth of July, and periods of shutdown for repairs. The crews comprise five men, working on three shifts of eight hours each.

Similar dredgers will be built at LaGrange in this state, and at McCall, Idaho.

* * *

The Stockton Hill Mine in the Forest Springs section below Grass Valley is being dewatered after a shutdown of some months. Operations will be resumed as soon as the shaft is freed of water. Local men are financing the reopening.

* * *

The old Nevada Eagles Silver mine in the Montezuma Range in Nevada, is being rehabilitated as a result of the improved position of the white metal. It was recently taken under lease and option by the Eagle Mountain Mining Company, and arrangements have ben made for extensive work.

Developed to a depth of 375 feet, the property was first worked more than fifty years ago and has been operated at intervals.

* * *

High grade or is still being mined by leasers in the old Mazuma Hills Mine at Seven Troughs, one of the group of properties owned by the Nevada State Gold Mines at Lovelock. The Davis lease is credited with extracting ninety-two pounds of ore assaying $50 a pound a few days ago from a rich shoot, and other leasers are in the money.

The mill, operated under lease, is crushing 100 tons of ore and tailings, coming from the Signal Peak Mine and the Coalition and Signal Peak dumps.

* * *

The Natomas Consolidated of California, operating dredger near Folsom and other California points, is negotiating for control of the extensive Cole-Kirchen and Donald placers near Manhattan at Tonaph, Nevada. The deposits extend for a long distance down Manhattan Gulch and have produced substantial amounts of gold.

Extensive prospecting of the placers, including tests with core drills, was carried on several years ago by the Hammon Engineering Company and other large corporations.

* * *

Extensive developement work is under way on the 2,300, 2,100 and 2,000 foot level sof the Old Eureka Mine. Besides the development operations, the company is cutting a station on the 2,500-foot level. The shaft is already down and timbered. The mill is operating at full capacity, dropping forty stamps. There are over 150 men employed. James Spiers is the superintendent.

* * *

Construction work on a hydraulic tailings empounding dam on the South Yuba River below the Omega and Relief Hill placer properties is expected to be commenced as soon as a federal permit is granted.

The building of the dam, which will be undertaken by the Black Rock Mining District, will be the first of its kind to be permitted by the state. The formation of the district is the first under the Seawell act of the 1933 state legislature.

* * *

Goldfield Operators, Ltd., reports an apparently important ore body has been disclosed by ore-drilling in the Red Top Mine of the Goldfield Consolidated group. Encountered in a virgin section of the old producer, the ore samples around $20 per ton. A crosscut has been started to develop the deposit.

The company holds long-term leases on the lower areas of the Red Top, Mohawk, Jumbo Extension and other properties in the heart of the Goldfield district. Arrangements are being made for the resumption of work on the Jumbo Extension and prospecting of an adjoining claim owned by the corporation.

THE BEGINNING OF RECOVERY

Charles F. Horner, Special Assistnat to the NRA Administrator, says:

On August 1, 1933, the Blue Eagle first flashed from the windows of countless business establishments in every part of America.

Within a few weeks after that date practically every employer in America had signed the President's Re-employment Agreement and received this great insignia of co-operation.

The thoughts of the entire population had changed. Where there had been despair and uncertainty, there followed hope and direction. The greatest peacetime co-operative movement in America had taken form.

The American people had proved again that under competent leadership they possessed an unparalleled genius for co-operation and organization.

We have gone a long way in the great task of restoring prosperity, but there is still much to be done. Whether the task will be fully completed or not depends upon the people themselves.

The Blue Eagle alone cannot bring prosperity, but it is a symbol of devotion to a common cause. It is the sign of the strength of a united people.

Without group consciousness or partisan bias, with a common desire to transfer the remaining millions from bread lines to payrolls, to the end that America may find greater security and happiness, is it not possible, under the Blue Eagle, to pledge once more our united effort to continue and accelerate the great progress already made? If we stop now, we may slip back. If we continue, we are bound to succeed.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE WEEK

NIRA Upheld Again: The Bookbinders' Trade Association of New York this week sought an injunction from Federal Judge Robert P. Patterson to prevent administration of the graphic arts code. The company brought suit against the various NRA agencies involved, declaring that the NIRA was unconstitutional and that the graphic arts code was invalid and not binding upon it. Judge Patterson denied the injunction and dismissed the suit.

Auto Dealers Like Their Code: A nationwide survey conducted by Automobile Topics finds that 80 per cent of the auto dealers of the country have already been benefited. In view of the fact that the code has only been in operation for six months, this is regarded as highly significant. The survey was aimed particularly to find out how small dealers were affected. Nearly 68 per cent of the replies were from dealers who sold less than 100 cars in 1933. Answers were received from forty-five states and represented twenty-nine makes of automobiles.

Business Rise Predicted: On the basis of the best facts available, Leon Henderson, NRA's chief economist, foresees a substantial rise in business for the fall and a less than usual slump during the remainder of the summer. While the chief of the Division of Research and Planning emphasizes that there is no expectation of a boom development, he points out that the decline thus far this summer has been less than normal and that there are now numerous signs of an upward trend in business generally.

June Employment: Labor disturbances and seasonal factors were responsible for a decrease in factory employment of 1.7 per cent, compared with May, and payrolls increasaed 3.1 per cent. Compared with June, 1933, however, employment has increased 21.1 per cent and payrolls 37.7 per cent. Eighty-one of the ninety industries surveyed show more workers this June than last, and eighty-five show larger payrolls. The machine tool, car building and locomotive industries report gains of over 100 per cent in both employment and payrolls since June, 1933.

Study Guide Reprinted: Less than six weeks ago NRA published "What Is the NRA? A Guide for Study and Discussion." Interest has been so keen among summer schools, educational organizations, women's clubs, etc., that the first edition is already exhausted and another printing has just been run off. The guide is available on request from both individuals and organizations.

The New York Times says: "Study groups and community forums which plan next fall to delve into the intricacies of the NRA may cease their worries over outlines and procedure. All the preliminary spade work has been done for them . . . by the Recovery Administration itself . . . In this vivid autobiography the NRA describes the circumstances of its birth and rise to fame, and adds leading questions as to how its codes are regarded and observed in the student's home town."

Handicapped Workers: In line with its consistent policy to avoid undue hardships to any group, NRA appointed a special commission to study the effects of codes upon the employment of the physically or mentally handicapped. Regarding the rumored widespread discharge of such employes as a result of codes, the commission declared that "in many localities no instances of this were found at all," though the report "seemed to be well founded" in Massachusetts. The commission recommends, however, that the administrator call to the attention of industries the social desirability of code measures providing for a suitable proportion of handicapped workers, in order to make certain of a fair distribution of opportunity to work.

SOME ANCIENT HAPPENINGS OF CITY REVIEWED

Incidents of Pioneer Days and Characters Recalled For Our Readers

(By Old-Timer)

Our story last week relating to the Thornton Beach-School street road project of Supervisor "Good Roads" Jim Casey, who judiciously expended $85,000 for grading and building two concrete bridges on the road during his closing term in office, has aroused enthusiastic general interest, and we are informed that Superivsor Witt has expressed himself as decidedly in favor of completing the long-neglected improvement and agrees with the idea that it would be of inestimable value to the entire San Mateo County road system. That our story is absolutely true is beyond doubt by the evidence of the abandoned grading and substantial concrete bridges still standing. Evidence can readily be observed without the careful inspection as made by the writer in the abandoned $45,000 concrete bridge which is within a hundred yards and in full view from the Skyline boulevard at a point directly west from the corner of Junipera Sera boulevard and School street. That bridge is as good today as any bridge in San Mateo County. It is fifty feet in length with a floor space of twenty feet in the clear, with attractive and substantial sides. This abandoned bridge has been tritely designated as a "Portal of the Past," but now has come a time when it should be changed to a "Monument of Glory." From this same point on the Skyline can also be seen the gulch mentioned last week as to be utilized for an easy grade down to Thornton Beach. It is sincerely hoped by every public spirited citizen that the county government and the county engineer will remember the splendid support given the latter by the North End electors and take the matter up again pronto.

The inclination of "Old Timer" is, first, to benefit the entire community here and now, as well as to convey interesting reminiscences of the pioneer days, avoiding unpleasant personalities. The late esteemed actress, Marie Dressler, is credited with a particularly trite saying along these lines, viz.: "I have learned not to carry sore throat and corns into the lives of others, because there never was an audience that did not like to be amused."

Mall Callan was the leading philosopher during the palmy days. In orating to a receptive audience at Jim Casey's White House, in speaking of the occasional holdups and safe crackings in Colma, he said that he did not believe in packing a six-gun at night just to have it taken away from him—as was the experience of Billy Silver.

At the Biggio Park, May 22, 1909, when the "Durable Dane," Battling Nelson, was floor manager for the barn dance, another interesting attraction was an entertainment given by Miss Violet Cramer of Vista Grande with her phonograph, with cylinder records of classical music, such as "Annie Rooney," and similar ditties. Violet was a bright pupil of Jefferson School and, after graduating, became a decided belle, but her wisdom caused her to bide her time until John Harris of Hillcrest crossed the horizon of her dreams, and then she married him. John is now superintendent of the South San Francisco Lumber Mills and they have a pretty home at 1429 Balboa, Burlingame.

Judge Ambrose McSweeney of South City wanted to be a candidate for "Goddess of Liberty" in the Colma Fourth of July celebration, but somebody objected—afraid she'd lose her hubby. Then "Mac" entered the swimming contest with Constable Bob Carroll and "Dutch" Sullivan, the exprizefighter, from Thornton Beach to Farralone Islands.

All the boys chipped in to help convert a refugee shack at Merced avenue and Garden street (now San Diego avenue and Knowles) into the Vista Grande M. E. Church. Rev. Edwin D. Kizer, Ph.D., was pastor, and Rev. J. E. Prescott was assistant pastor. Sunday School superintendent, S. H. Perley; Miss Deets, deaconess; R. Nelson Sr., reader of the Epworth League; Mrs. Railton, Junior League.

While water was generally considered merely for the purpose of "sailing ships and washing feet because it was too thin to drink," there seemed to be a scarcity of the fluid in most of the new tracts on the hill.

The American Real Estate Company became real peeved because the Record stated that the company was not keeping good faith with refugee lot purchasers in Hillcrest. The only supply of water for Vista Grande, Mission and Hillcrest tracts was a tank on the east side of Mission road, opposite where the Pescaro building stands. We vision a scene of Fred and Mrs. Michaelsen, carrying a lantern, packing water to their Vista Grande shack at night when even the tank was a water supply that did not always materialize.

The population of San Mateo County in 1900 was 12,094, and in 1910, 26,585. California in 1900 had a population of 1,485,053, and in 1910 it had 2,277,549.

The exact wording of a display advertisement in the North End Record read: "By Jinks! We air gittin' up another Barn Dance for you-alls; musik what is musik; plenty of hay and ice cream; Stanley Ketchel will bust a broncho and be floor manager."

By special request we are naming the officials of San Mateo County of that period. Here they are:

Superior Judge, George H. Buck; Assemblyman, Henry Ward Brown; Treasurer, P. P. Chamberlain; Tax Collector, C. L. McCracken; District Attorney, J. J. Bullock; Assessor, C. D. Hayward; County Clerk, Joseph H. Nash; Recorder, John F. Johnson; Auditor, Henry Underhill; Superintendent of Schools, Roy Cloud; Coroner, Dr. H. G. Plymire; Surveyor, James B. Newman; Health Officer, Dr. J. H. Beatty of Colma; Supervisors: First District, J. T. Casey, Colma; Second District, Jack Coleman, San Mateo; Third District, P. H. McEvoy, Menlo Park; Fourth District, Joseph M. Francis, Half Moon Bay; Fifth District, Daniel E. Blackburn, Pescadero.

First District Officers—Justice of the Peace, Ambrose McSweeney, South City; Constable, Robert Carroll, South City.

Glancing backward, the path for the past twenty years is strewn with many valuable and interesting incidents that "Old Timer" will give you from week to week.

THE STORY OF THE MONTH OF AUGUST

Significance of Its History, Its Special Flower And Its Gem

August, the eighth month of the calendar year, was named for the Roman Emperor, Augustus, one of the greatest rulers that ever lived; and there is indeed something royal about it. It is a month of gold and purple—its sun throws a "golden glory" on the yellowing fields, and everywhere there are goldenrod and purple aster. It is one of the warmest months of the year in the northern hemisphere, and usually one of the stillest, so its heat is likely to be the "sweltering" variety. Its special flower is the poppy, and its gem the sardonyx.

July, Julius Caesars month, had thirty-one days, and the newly named month only thirty. Not wishing Julius to be more honored than himself, Augustus took a day from February, already the shortest of the months, and gave it to the month of August.

NOMINATION SOUGHT BY RILEY AT PRIMARY

Controller Ray L. Riley is one man at the state capitol who comes before the electorate with a record that entitles him to the support of good citizens everywhere.

The following editorial recently appeared in the Sacramento Bee and the Modesto Bee-News Herald:

"If there is one man in the state capitol who is diligent in the public's business and, therefore, comes before the electorate with a just and righteous claim to re-election it is State Controller Ray L. Riley. Owing to the peculiarities of the state law, the candidates for this office must seek a party nomination when the duties of the office itself are non-partisan. What the people need in this position is not a Democrat or a Republican, but an honest and conscientious citizen, and Ray L. Riley is both. During his term he has saved the taxpayers millions of dollars through his careful scrutiny and his unrelenting watchfulness in seeing to it that all state expenditures are kept strictly within the law. If there is any question of irregularity or shadow of illegality of any financial transaction, Riley refuses to honor the claims until the attorney general's office or the courts have given him a ruling. It also is highly desirable that the controller be entirely independent of control by other branches of the state government or politicians who are in charge thereof. Riley has proved himself to be such an official. And the knowledge of that fact has prevented many unscrupulous and dubious raids on the state funds. If there be some opposition to him in certain quarters today, it can be traced to the very fact that Ray L. Riley is his own man and will not compromise his own or the state's integrity. Good citizens everywhere from Siskiyou to San Diego should unite to insure Ray Riley's re-election. California will need him on the job during the next four years, not some inexperienced official."—Ad.

DARTHEA

By R. H. WILKINSON

©. Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

"NOW take my Gene," said the dominating Mrs. Metcalf.

She sighed wearily.

"He's such a darling husband, comparatively speaking, of course. But so helpless. So utterly incompetent when it comes to taking care of himself. I've often wondered how a man would really get along without a woman to take care of him."

The ladies of the Afternoon Tea club nodded and murmured their ascent.

That is, with the exception of Darthea Bushell.

Darthea was the newest member, and also the youngest.

She had been married less than a year.

She said: "Men seem pretty capable, to me. I often wonder why they get married at all. There'd be so much more for themselves, if they didn't have to share it with someone."

"My dear,"—Mrs. Metcalf squeezed lemon into her tea and smiled indulgently—"my dear, no one blames you for your attitude—now. When you've been married as long as I, you'll have a change of heart. Oh, I know how you feel, darling. We were all that way once. So very much in love, so very sure our husbands were all we thought them to be—loyal and devoted and interested only in their wives. But there, I've said enough. Don't let me disillusion you, Darthea, darling. Be happy—and innocent—while you may."

"I am happy and I'm not the least bit disillusioned," said Darthea.

"So don't feel that you have to pity me, Mrs. Metcalf. I don't want Neal to be interested in me and no one else. And—I want him to know other women, if that's what you mean."

Mrs. Metcalf smiled blandly and glanced around at the circle of faces. "That isn't all I mean, Darthea, darling. Oh, there's no need of feeling hurt about it, or believing that your married life is going to be different from the rest. We've all been through the same thing. Take my Gene, for example. There was a time—after we'd been married about five years—when, had I been a less broad-minded person, we might have ended in separation. But it wasn't for long. And the truth of the matter is I'm glad it happened. For from that day to this I have used the incident to shame him into doing anything I ask. You see, I never completely forgave him."

She broke off to laugh amusedly.

"Oh, yes, that little wayward act of Gene's has its uses. There is, for example, no need to worry now for fear that he will ever stray again. I'm just as sure that Gene's only interest at this moment is with his family as I am that I'm sitting in this chair."

Darthea bit her lip.

She wanted to say she thought Gene was a martyr for even living with such a person.

But she didn't, and while she tried to conjure up a less direct dig, Mrs. Metcalf turned beaming toward Bette Oliver, who was one of the few unmarried members of the club.

Bette was young, extremely pretty and considered in the vernacular of the Tea club as "fast."

She had been admitted only because her career on the legitimate stage was beginning to attract attention and her membership might reflect some glory on the organization.

"And you, my dear Miss Oliver, I'm sure this conversation must be extremely boring to an unmarried lady. And yet I'm equally sure your opinion would be a valuable one, especially—"

Mrs. Metcalf looked coy—"especially since you are so well acquainted with Darthea's handsome young husband."

Darthea was furious.

She might have forgiven most anything—but this!

Such unadulterated, direct insinuation.

Bette Oliver laughed nervously.

She had long since discovered that a woman's attitude toward life and love and things changed with matrimony.

The talk of these older married women sickened her, created in her a feeling of skepticism.

Yet it was as much to her advantage to be a member of the club as it was for these ladies to have her.

She laughed resignedly, without looking at Darthea.

"Please!"

After all, a single lady would hardly be qualified to express a worthwhile opinion about such a weighty subject.

It was the fact that Bette Oliver evaded the issue that set Darthea to thinking.

That and the insinuation in Mrs. Metcalf's voice.

Then, too, there was Bette's nervous little laugh, her direct refusal to meet Darthea's eyes.

The thing at first seemed silly, absurd.

She even smiled a little at thoughts of Neal being false.

Dear, loving Neal.

Theirs had been such a perfect match; so sincere and happy and gay; so broad and free and honest.

No, Neal couldn't be false and act the way he did.

It wasn't human.

Yet the inevitable questions kept popping into her mind, pounding against her brain.

And at last, wearied, she resigned herself, admitted they could not be disregarded forever.

They must be faced, answers found.

Had she been a little fool?

Did these women know things that she had been blind to?

Were they laughing at her, pitying her?

Was Neal actually interested in Bette Oliver?

Keeping rendezvous with her.

It wasn't an impossibility.

Such things had happened before.

She shuddered as thoughts leaped into her mind of other women who had gone blindly ahead, loving, adoring, not even suspecting their husbands of falsity.

Only in the end to have the hurt more poignant, more lasting.

There was a dance that night at the country club.

All the Afternoon Tea women were there with their husbands.

Bette Oliver was there, and a dozen other young, unmarried women.

It was a gay affair.

Darthea had always been a little proud to think that the women who attended the country club dances were infatuated with her handsome husband.

She liked to think that he was hers forever and ever and that she was envied.

Tonight it was different.

She followed him with her eyes.

She watched his every movement.

She tried to stifle the hurt when she saw him dancing with other women, smiling into their faces.

She tried not to notice that he seemed to enjoy being with Bette Oliver.

She fought against sudden knowledge that his attentions to her, his wife, were dutiful.

And when toward the end of the evening she saw Neal step through the french doors on to the veranda, saw Bette Oliver follow a moment later, it was with a masterful attempt at self-control that she withheld a scream.

She could not resist the impulse to follow, to satisfy the burning curiosity that was eating at her soul.

She left her partner abruptly, rudely; skirted the dance hall, gained the veranda through a door at the far end of the room.

It was a beautiful summer's night.

The great expanse of golf course that fell away at the base of the veranda was flooded with soft, silvery moonlight.

A section of the veranda, the end near which Darthea stood, was in shadow.

She saw dim figures leaning against the railing—a man and a woman.

Darthea slid along the side of the building, noiselessly, suppressing her breathing.

She heard whispered voices—and then abruptly her blood froze.

The girl was Bette Oliver!

There was no mistaking that baby-like profile, etched as it was against the bright moonlight beyond.

Darthea clutched at her throat, felt suddenly weak and sick.

Then it was true!

Mrs. Metcalf and the other women had been laughing at her!

Neal—her Neal—was false!

Seized by a sudden, uncontrollable fury, Darthea suddenly sped across the veranda.

There was no definite purpose in her act, no recognizable emotion, no desire other than to satisfy a primitive instinct by clawing at the face of this brazen huzzy who had robbed her of faith.

At the sound of her step the couple near the railing turned.

Darthea came upon them abruptly, reached out and felt her hands entwined in the golden blond hair of Bette Oliver, and knew a great feeling of satisfaction.

Then and only then did she look toward the man.

And in that single instant a great weakness and nausea claimed her.

She wavered, gripping Bette's hair more securely for support; felt sudden relief and shame and guilt.

For the face of the man who stared back at her was that of henpecked Gene Metcalf!

Germs Find Refuge in the Uncleaned Pocket

Most of us are particular to use a clean handkerchief every day, but we never think of sending our pockets to the wash. A London doctor believes that half the colds we catch are from germs stowed away in the walls of our pockets from handkerchiefs. A man's suit has, on an average, eleven pockets, eleven different centers of possible infection. Taking it all around, we are as clean as any people on earth, so it is odd to notice our sins of omission in this respect. We used to jeer at women when they wore trailing skirts, but men today wear their trousers permanently turned up, providing a perfect lodgement for dust and germs. Then our shoes. We are very careful to clean and polish the outsides, but who ever dreams of cleaning the inside? Yet surely they need it. The same is true of hats. A man's hat may be worn for years and naturally becomes soaked with perspiration, yet few men send their hats to be cleaned.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Midsummer Night Formal Fashions

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IT IS fashionable to look taller by night than by day. At least that is actually what happens when you doff your happy-go-lucky, carefree and sportsy-looking clothes (they are certainly all that this summer) and come forth, when falls the shades of night, in the long-skirted dresses which fashion decrees for formal evening wear.

All party frocks are now styled with floor-length skirts which often as not flaunt trains, making even the younger set take on an aspect of dignity and poise. There is something statuesque about these slim-cut form-fitting lengthened skirts which manage to make you look inches and inches taller than you really are.

A feature which especially commends these lengthened, sleek, form-accenting skirts is that no matter how snug-fitting they may be about the hips (which they are almost to an exaggerated degree) when they arrive at the knees they are given an accommodating flare which affords perfect freedom of motion. In the advance fall showings, in some instances the skirts have knee-depth insets of sunburst pleatings (usually of soft chiffon). Sometimes the pleating flares all around, making the top of the skirt appear slimmer than ever by way of contrast.

The interesting part about this program of costume design which places such stress on a styling which is dignified and sophisticated is, that even the simplest of materials are being worked up in this way. Indeed, many of the smartest numbers in the formal evening fashion parade are made of inexpensive organdies, voiles, nets and other sheer cottons. Even more amazing and highly intriguing is the fact that the very leaders among the haute couture are creating some of their most successful party dresses of pique and even the once-humble seersucker and ginghams are daring to play a formal role in the evening mode.

Speaking of inexpensive cottons as made up in pretentious evening gowns, the model to the right in the group demonstrates the idea perfectly. It is fashioned of a simple cotton ratine which is patterned in a pretty cross-bar motif. It is in that soft dusky shade of pink which is such a favorite with smart Parisiennes this summer. The roses at the waistline carry the same pink tone. Of course it has a matching jacket.

The dinner jacket of white organdie which tops the stunning evening gown to the left in the picture is a very important accessory. Organdie jackets such as this one, also organdie wraps fashioned on the long, loose swagger lines, are quite the rage. As to the dress itself, a pink crepe with black printings fashions it. It seems after all that prints are again triumphing in the summer mode, especially those in striking effects.

The long-sleeve dinner gown remains a favorite. As for lace as a medium for the formal costume, its prestige is assured. The beige lace frock with its colored jewel clasps and belt buckle as shown centered in this trio of attractive night fashions should prove of special interest to the matron. They are so lovely, these pastel colored or chalk white lace frocks.

NEW LACE EFFECTS SEEN IN LINGERIE

Newest additions to lingerie collections show fresh treatments of the embroidered and appliqued lace decoration which is worked to contribute a "different" appearance by reason of the posing of two layers of net. In addition to giving much greater sturdiness to this delicate form of trimming, the use of the two layers gives a flower-like background which is not achieved by the single layer. Through this the flower appliques are worked or embroidery posed, or the lace appliqued.

Washable Satins Hit New Note in Spectator Frocks

Pastel satins, washable, of course, in delectable shades of frappe pink and ice blue, strike a new note in spectator frocks and give promise of a big fall season for this popular fabric.

Spanish and Mexican plaids and hot-country colors hold sway in new beach skirts, sweeping wide, but cut short at the knee. With these are worn halter tops, big-brimmed hats with a Spanish or Mexican sweep, and colorful scarfs or sashes.

Cottons and linens score for the simple play-time frock, with linen shantung and Chinese damask a bit newer than ginghams and seersuckers. Perky shoulder bows, square necklines, reversible collars that can be worn either front or back, concealed pleats, and a maximum of buttons lend charming variety. Potter's blue, lettuce green and sunny yellows give verve to the plain-color frock which is rivaling stripes, plaids and checks in importance.

Popular Costume

Suits are the smartest thing you can wear for luncheons and afternoon affairs up to the dinner hour when a softer line is favored.

"Back Fins" on Gown

"Back fins" are a feature of a stunning new negligee in heavy satin of soft blue. They are accented by linings of bright coral.

VELVET TOPS LACE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A richly colorful lace dress accompanied with a velvet wrap is an ideal combination for this time of year when autumn begins to send hints of its coming. From Paris comes the report that at all outdoor fetes the velvet wrap remains first choice. Often the girdle which elaborates the dress is of velvet which matches the coat. Which is true of the model pictured. The dress is done in plum color lace. The bow-tied girdle is of the identical velgrana velvet (has a grained crepe-like weave) which fashions the wide-cape-sleeved wrap.

Floss Fringe

As an amusing change from ostrich capes for evening wear, Schiaparelli has introduced an imitation of feathers, made of bright artificial floss fringe.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the railroad station they meet Mrs. Denver, engaged as matron. At the school the group is struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains the unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, at the same moment, some years ago.

"Strange! Strange!" Payne muttered. "It's a marvel to me that Berenice Bracebridge has emerged so sane and sweet from such congeries of circumstances—that dreary pile, that strange guardian, a tragedy in her background, if not in her life."

On the other side, Arthur left them rather abruptly. "I'm not going in just yet. I'll see you at dinner." He strolled around a while, visited the little graveyard, finally leaned up against a tree and regarded the old academy, from whose cupola high above the eaves it was probable that no bell would sound again. No sign of life was about it—no light shone forth from door or window. Its secret—whatever it was—seemed locked in its ancient heart.

His thought drifted to the figures. He meant to see where they were kept; he wanted to examine them closely.

He looked about him—a basement ran under all the house, its windows facing a stone retaining wall which at one spot was broken to admit of steps going down. Arthur, examining them, saw that they led to a door which was half ajar; a door hanging by one hinge and badly in need of paint. Green moss blanketed the steps and muffled Arthur's footsteps. Squeezing through the narrow aperture the door's sagging position offered, he found himself in a dismal passage from which opened rooms. Cautiously opening several doors, he saw rooms of a depressing aspect—dark, moldy, the plaster or paper falling from the walls. One proved to be an abandoned kitchen with the great range of an antique pattern rusting away in its frame of black-painted bricks. A marble pastry table had become so yellow and discolored that it suggested a kind of diseased stone. A bucket under it, covered with dried-up red paint, did not seem a cheerful object. An old, rusty frying pan lay disconsolately in one corner.

He went on hurriedly—and finally came to the room which he sought. It had been used, it was evident, at one time, as a supplementary schoolroom, for a blackboard covered one of the walls behind the old-fashioned teacher's desk. On it in freshly-written letters made by red chalk were four names.

Jethro Bracebridge, Jr.
Althea Bracebridge.
Norman Bracebridge.
Isabel Bracebridge.

He saw these names as he entered. The next moment he started violently. The four wax figures in the fading light were so real that he imagined for a minute that he had blundered into an actual study hour. Then their preternatural stillness told him that he had found the hiding place of the dummies. Janet had been quite right—they were beautifully done—the flesh tint quite natural, the grave, sweet, brooding faces of the little girls as absorbed as if some lesson of a long-ago spring had continued over the years an eternal problem. Their soft, abundant golden hair moved a little in the draught which drew in from the half-opened door. He put a finger against one curl, then quickly raised it; as if a thrill of life had been communicated. Arthur watched each figure in turn as if a danger existed, that to cease to look at one of them was to incur a harm from the rest. He jumped! Had one moved! "But I'm a fool," he commented. "The first time in my life I ever had nerves."

The golden hair on one of the figures stirred softly in the draft. He bent to look at the eyes, almost expecting to see the lashes quiver; then glanced up, and this time a kind of paralysis kept him from showing the emotion he felt. In the doorway stood an immensely tall man. Two piercing eyes regarded him from a putty-pale face. The man made no sound, but after a prolonged scrutiny turned and went down the passage.

Again he heard steps in the passage, but they were light, like those of a woman. Berenice appeared in the doorway.

"Balder told me you were looking at the figures. I came to tell you it is not the best thing to do!" she said in her gentle voice, her beautiful eyes regarding him gravely.

"I am sorry if I have done anything out of the way or anything to hurt you, Miss Bracebridge. I admit I yielded to my curiosity."

"It doesn't hurt me," she answered. "But my guardian becomes very much disturbed if people look at the figures."

"Did he—have these figures made?"

"Oh, no! But he will tell you himself."

"I am glad you cautioned me about these figures—"

"Oh, I like you all—I want you to stay!"

"I am glad of that. I hope you will know Miss Mercer better. She is very lovely."

"I quite agree with you! They have not always been lovely."

"You mean the teachers—governesses?"

"Yes, and usually when they found out about these figures they went away. They—they were afraid of them."

"Of their strangeness, perhaps?"

"Yes—and the servants are the same way—except Balder."

"Who is Balder?"

"The very huge man. He came to work for my father years ago; and father jestingly called him 'Balder the Beautiful,' from Matthew Arnold's poem, I suppose. He is very ugly, but he is a strong man to have around the place. And he doesn't mind the figures. But the country people around here do. Did you see some of the pupils watching the corridors?"

"Yes, I noticed it."

"There's a queer, superstitious tradition in the mountains that the figures are really alive. No one, I suppose, actually believes it, but no servant will go down the corridor when they are kept after dark." She paused; then said: "Tell me, did you know Mr. Payne before you came here?"

"No."

"He has eyes that look straight through one."

"I am sure he is a good psychologist."

"I am sure of it, too. When I know him better I shall ask him—many questions."

"May I ask you one?"

"Certainly."

"Why were you on that dangerous cliff path this afternoon? It was comparatively safe where we were—there's a bank; but you had nothing but air between you and that frightful whirl. I was afraid you would venture down to the little platform—the little stone ledge overhanging the whirl."

She shivered. "Oh, no; they fell from there!"

"Poor children! Were there no witnesses?"

"Yes—an old farmer coming up on the other side to fell a tree—he heard them shout and saw them just as they plunged in, their arms raised trying desperately to regain their balance. Then they all went down. Father was in such agony of mind because he had detained Mr. Haskell from going along with them to curb their adventurous spirits; he wanted Mr. Haskell to take down dictation, and they were shut up on the library all afternoon. Then came a knock on the door. It was Balder to say that while he was working in the vegetable garden a farmer, white as death, had rowed across the lake in the twilight to tell of the accident. He cried like a child, could only cry out for a while: 'Doctor Jethro! My God! I could not help them. I was on the other side.'"

"The farmer's name?"

"Jerry Moore. He lives about a mile from here, all alone; his people have all died."

"He's trustworthy?"

"Jerry? Oh, yes! yes. And he adored my brothers and sisters. They were so gay and friendly with everyone."

"Was there ice forming at the time? Could they have slipped on that?"

"It was too early for ice. No, Isabel went too near, lost her balance, I suppose, fell, and dragged the others down."

"Then—the figures—were made—"

"Ah, please! He will tell you about these."

Her eyes softened as she looked at them; and he thought of a day when she would be much older than the ages represented by these mannequins; and down the long avenue of time she would still perhaps see her lost brothers and sisters in their eternal adolescence; and keep them in a playground of memory from which they could never emerge adult and weary. Her own brilliant beauty had an element in it which he felt would be there through all her life—the indestructible element of the soul.

"Shall I shut the door?"

"Yes; you see, there's a small circle of glass let into it—so Mr. Haskell can look in—and see that they are right—and in their places."

"But why look in—why have them around at all?"

"It was a clause in father's will," she said. "It needn't be—after I am twenty-one. Oh, Mr. Haskell will tell you."

They shut the door quietly as if not to disturb those waxen scholars, and down the corridor they went together. At the foot of the staircase leading to the main hall she left him.

Arthur, full of his story, sought out Wilton. He ran him down at last in the library. The vast place was illuminated only by a kerosene lamp, in whose circle of light Wilton was examining some books.

"Hello, old fellow!

"Hello, boy! Well, what have you found out? I can tell by your manner that you have discovered something."

"I've been talking to Berenice."

Wilton looked up jealously. "Where did you see her?"

What Profit Passing?

To pass the car ahead or not to pass it is a question that confronts thousands of motorists every hour of the day. The answer lies in deciding definitely what will be gained by passing, says the National Automobile Club. Very often one's net profit in slipping ahead of the car in front is a gain of merely a car's length in the long parade. In such a case, the profit is entirely too small. However, it must look large to a considerable number of drivers for gaining a mere car's length seems to be a passion with many.

"Shorted" Wires

Any wire in the electrical system of a car that short circuits and starts smoking or burning should be broken or cut immediately, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. The wire should never be grasped with bare hands, as severe burns may result. Cut or pull it loose with a pair of pliers. Pliers with an insulated hand grip should be carried in the car for emergency use.

Going Up a Hill

It is far better driving to shift into second when climbing a hill than to strain the car by remaining in high, according to L. G. Evans, Director of Roadside Service of the National Automobile Club.

AMERICAN LEGION DAY AT CALIFORNIA ANNUAL STATE FAIR

First of any state to honor the American Legion with a special day all its own, the California State Fair will give over its entire program on Sunday, September 2, to a patriotic "American Legion Day" program.

Cooperating with local officers of the two Sacramento posts, departmental officers in California will work out a round of ceremonies which will not only draw Legionnaires from all parts of California to Sacramento but will provide the thousands of visitors at the fair with a colorful military spectacle.

The new department commander to be chosen in August will be given his first official presentation to the Legion and to the public in a special ceremony which will open the program in front of the main grandstand.

Massed bugle corps of all posts visiting the fair will sound "To the Colors" and following brief remarks by the new commander, massed bands of the Legion will play "The Star Spangled Banner."

A spirited contest for a series of state fair cups and trophies will then be held between the bands, drum corps and drill teams of the various state posts. Efforts will be made to have the greatest possible representation from all parts of the state.

In the evening a mighty fireworks pageant, depicting an attack by land and air on a fortressed city, will set the heavens aflame and conclude with elaborate set pieces showing the Legion emblem and the American flag.

The date for American Legion Day was set for September 2 to permit Legionnaires to take advantage of the two day holiday which occurs with Labor Day on Monday, September 3.

Ignition Wires

New spark plugs will not correct ignition trouble if the insulation on wires leading from plugs to distributor is not in good condition, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. Often the insulation may appear to be good when closer inspection will reveal slight cracks which tend to permit spark leaks. Rubber ages rapidly under the action of heat and light and is also affected by oil and grease. Insulated wires should be inspected regularly for deterioration.

The committee of Legionnaires and V. F. W. is making excellent headway on the first annual Armistice Ball, to be held Saturday evening, November 10. A night long to be remembered is in store for all who attend. We are planning for the best union music possible to obtain and a minimum of seven pieces. Novelties will be scattered throughout the program. More information on this ball will be broadcast from time to time as information is available.

Remember to keep the following dates open:

August 24—Bayshore Kennel Club.

November 10—First Annual Armistice Ball, under auspices of the War Veterans of Daly City.

VOTERS
of Daly City
an opportunity knocks at the DOOR of SAN MATEO COUNTY

Experts on port development—both army and private engineers—have agreed that San Mateo County's port project in Redwood Harbor is sound and that the peninsula has a perfect set-up for harbor development.

Since 1882 the federal government has officially recognized Redwood Harbor and has expended close to $75,000 in its development. Now the federal government is pledged to spend $203,000 on the project.

This is contingent upon the approval by the voters of a $460,000 bond issue August 28. The government will buy $312,000 of these bonds at a low interest rate and will advance funds for immediate development.

San Mateo County must not overlook this opportunity. Port development means the creation of PERMANENT JOBS for labor—it means that your property, whether residential, business or industrial—will be increased in value. It means cheaper goods, larger payrolls, new industries, more homes and LOWER TAXES.
